

Social Security Lawyer Frequently Asked Questions

Q: When will I receive my first payment after I have been approved for social security disability insurance?

A: You are not eligible to start receiving social security disability benefits until you have been injured for five months. You will really begin receiving payments the sixth month after the onset date of injury, since benefits are paid a month after they are due. If you are awaiting back pay benefits, they are usually paid within 2 months of approval. Remember that you will not receive retroactive benefits for the aforementioned five months you must wait to be eligible for benefits. If you have any questions regarding backpay or the length of time it is taking for you to receive your benefits, it may be wise to speak with a social security lawyer. Q: If you are awarded social security disability benefits, are your children also eligible for benefits?

A: Yes, your dependents might qualify for disability benefits too. Unmarried children under the age of 18 are eligible. Your children will qualify for benefits until age 19, if they are still students. Your spouse may qualify if he is over age 61. Your spouse might qualify, regardless of age, if he is supporting your children who are 16 or younger. The amount of benefits your qualified family members receive may be as much as half of the monthly payment amount to which you are entitled. Contact a social security lawyer, if you have any concerns about eligibility or applying for disability benefits for any of your family members. Q: When you are currently receiving social security disability payments and your file is reviewed, what does it mean?

A: Your file will be periodically reviewed even after you receive benefits. A diary or schedule of when reviews should be conducted is established when you are awarded benefits and is based on the factors of your individual case. Most reviews are usually conducted every one, three, and seven years. Given the current backlog, however, reviews are not necessarily being conducted on that schedule. Because of that, you should be ready for a review at any time. Your file is reviewed periodically to assure that the most recent details about your condition are noted. Disability examiners are interested in determining whether your injury has improved, worsened or remains the same. A social security lawyer can assist you with any issues that may arise as a result of a continuing disability review. The experience and knowledge of a social security lawyer can be invaluable, if you are worried about losing social security disability benefits due to changes in your condition or employment.
